Dear Dr. Vamsi Sir,

I hope this message finds you well.

Two days ago, Mr. Gangadhar visited me on your behalf and shared the important updates regarding the present situation of Chiro Healthcare. I am writing to summarize those points and to discuss the way forward in a manner that is fair and practical for both of us.

Key Points for Consideration:

1. As discussed, you too are currently facing financial constraints similar to mine and are unable to continue funding the lab operations.
2. At the outset of our partnership, you had assured me that in case I was unable to continue investing further or chose to exit, I would be relieved immediately and my invested funds would be returned without delay. However, that has not happened yet. I kindly request that we honor this understanding in good faith, as it was the foundation of our professional association.
3. You have proposed two possible options for the lab — either to close it down or to sell it to a suitable buyer.
4. An ₹80 lakh loan is under repayment, with a significant balance still outstanding, which is adding to the financial pressure.
5. To explore the selling option effectively, I kindly request a complete and transparent breakdown of all lab expenditures and assets — including furniture, machinery, fittings, and other infrastructure — so we can accurately evaluate the value and attract potential buyers.
6. Out of the ₹80 lakhs loan, ₹30 lakhs was paid in advance to the supplier for purchasing pending equipment such as the ultrasound machine. I suggest we take refund amount from the supplier which will allow us to repay this ₹30 lakhs, which would offer major financial relief and help safeguard our credit standing.
7. Before we proceed with selling the lab, it would be better to first clear the existing loan, as bank policies may not allow for loan transfer to a buyer. In addition, potential buyers are unlikely to show interest if the firm carries outstanding liabilities. Resolving the loan upfront will ensure a smoother and more transparent sale process without complications.

Let us resolve this matter with mutual cooperation and urgency, so that we can bring proper closure to the venture and avoid further complications.

Thanks N Regards,
S Lokanatha Patro
